Dear Sirs;

I recently attended the Lightning Protection Installation Training held in Grayslake IL. at the Harger Lightning and Grounding factory. The first day's instructor was Dave Silvester. The second day was led by Mark Harger.

I've been installing residential and small commercial Lightning Protection Systems in Colorado for over 16 years. In all of those years I have had the opportunity to attend several training seminars, have gone through a couple classes on DVD, and attended UL University. I got more out of the Harger class than any of the others I have been through. We had a lively, eclectic, and inquisitive group. There was lots of class participation and so many questions that we almost didn't get to cover all the topics. Our instructors were informative, friendly, funny and above all well versed in the topic that we all attended the class for in the first place. I don't think we even managed to stump them once. The only thing we all wanted to know when all was done is. Will there be an advanced class for Lightning Protection?

If given the opportunity I would gladly go back to another class to see what I could pick from the brains of these men who really know their subject and much more to the point, know how to share it with others.

Sincerely,
